Introduction:

“Water is life” is an unquestionable saying, so water is the presence of everything on Earth. Water is the basis for any human development in any part of the world, when it is a precondition for human survival on Earth. Water is very important to improve human health as it is the first step to achieving its well-being.

Water scarcity often causes many risks such as disease, epidemics, famine, and migration, in addition to inequality and political and social instability, as these tragic crises occur continuously in many countries of the world due to the lack of clean water. Statistics indicate that approximately 40% of the world's population does not have acceptable means of sanitation, and safe water sources are not available for more than a billion people in the world, which leads to serious risks including diarrhea, which remains a major cause of disease and death in the developing world, It kills about 2.2 million people annually. 90% of these deaths are among children.

Facts:

71 percent of the global population, 5.2 billion people, had safely-managed drinking water in 2015, but 844 million people still lacked even basic drinking water.

Water scarcity affects 4 out of 10 people.
